

ABSTRACT

The invention relates to a method for receiving and storing optically detectable data of an object on a storage medium. According to the invention, a camera is used to take a sequence of several individual images of the object whose position is spatially adjusted with regard to the relative position between the object and the camera. The sharp displayed areas of the individual images are determined and one or more resulting images are composed therefrom.